Point from Coordination meeting: underlying assumption is that no except OIR organization/in Washington is actually capable of writing intelligence ~~examples~~--- political and economic intelligence particularly, but really, any ~~int~~ intelligence.

The reasons for this lie in the facts that (a) OIR is part of the Department of State which is the fount of all wisdom; and (b) the only really competent, scholarly people in the business are there.

When says that intelligence studies should be initiated from nothing rather than from a CIA draft, what he really means is that studies should be initiated from an OIR draft. (Note his statement that no draft should have been furnished by us for the Jug paper this morning because he already had a draft!)

His reason for this stand is that any ~~study~~ piece of writing treated in a committee, as he well knows, will tend, no matter how much discussion ensues with changes to be incorporated, largely what it was when it started. This business is, in other words, just part of his unending campaign to get ORE abolished in favor of OIR.*

His statements in general about immediate participation in a paper, however plausible they may have seemed in the meeting, are largely ridiculous: they make sense only in theory. If you believed what he says, coordination would work out this way: When a topic for a study had been decided on, one of our ORE representatives
